

Wireless Philosophy – An Introduction to Critical Thinking

Critical Thinking

Critical thinking is a topic oft raised by members of the atheist community. We often like to promote ourselves as ‘the rational ones’, and we often see atheists telling members of the theist community that they need to apply critical thinking to their beliefs. How many atheists have actually studied critical thinking though? While I do try my best to introduce my own original work in each Answers in Reason article that I post, I thought a nice change of pace, and an informative and useful change of pace, would be to share various YouTube, Blog, and Podcast series or shows that may help people learn a little more about various topics such as critical thinking, ethics, epistemology, and various other subjects included in philosophy. As my first such share I introduce a YouTube channel called Wireless Philosophy, and their series on Critical Thinking. The videos themselves are reasonably short, but packed full of information. They are worth a watch, whether you are new to the topic of critical thinking or are already well-informed.

